GRASSI PIETRE: TRADITION, INNOVATION, AND THE CREATIVE POWER OF VICENZA STONE

Grassi Pietre is a modern company rooted in a millennia-old tradition, a wealth of knowledge that proves invaluable in large-scale projects and international collaborations with some of the world's most renowned architectural firms. The story begins in the second half of the 19th century: the building that now houses the company dates back to 1930, but the first records of the Grassi family's stone extraction and processing activities can be traced to a tax document from 1850. The invention of electricity and, later, the introduction of post-war mechanization, revolutionized the industry. It was Pietro Grassi who changed the fate of the family workshop, transforming it into a modern enterprise, while the fourth generation, currently leading the company, has brought Grassi Pietre to prominence in the world of architectural and design stonework.

Italian stone for architecture and design since 1850.

Vicenza Stone is much more than a material: it is a living surface, capable of engaging with light and space. Its textures tell stories of nature and time, bringing depth and warmth to every environment. Each finish carries its own character — from honed to brushed, from scratched to corteccia — ranging from subtle marks to bold movements. Choosing a texture means choosing a design language. The same stone, worked in different ways, changes identity: it can be minimalist or tactile, contemporary or classic.

Textures enhance expressive potential: a façade, a floor, or a design detail acquires a distinctive personality. These are surfaces that never tire the eye, because they evolve with daylight and use. Vicenza Stone is a suggestive material, able to integrate harmoniously into projects with a contemporary language while maintaining a deep connection with historical contexts.

This photographic catalogue collects material impressions ready to inspire new architecture.

More than just a material, Vicenza Stone is a true creative tool for designers and Grassi Pietre is a trusted partner supporting you in making your project a timeless reality.
